

Editor's Note

In this issue, Bill Kolasky, former Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Antitrust Division during the Bush Administration—and now a Kerry fundraiser—and Bill Kovacic, General Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission under both Tim Muris and Deborah Majoras, reflect upon the past four years and speculate upon what changes could occur under a different presidential administration.

We invite you to review prior issues of the Antitrust Source to glean an overall picture of current antitrust policies in the Bush Administration. Below are links to previous interviews the Antitrust Source conducted with various agency representatives over the past four years.

—MICHAEL BARNETT

J. Bruce McDonald, Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Regulatory Matters, U.S. Department of Justice, May 2004, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/Jul04-McDonaldIntrvw7=23.pdf>

Susan Creighton, Director, FTC Bureau of Competition, March 2004, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/march04/creighton.pdf>

William E. Kovacic, General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, January 2004, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/jan04/kovacic.pdf>

Makan Delrahim, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice, November 2003, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/nov03/delrahim.pdf>

Joseph Simons, Director, FTC Bureau of Competition, May 2003, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/may03/simonsinterview.pdf>

R. Hewitt Pate, Acting Assistant Attorney General, Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice, January, 2003, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/jan03/pate.pdf>

Deborah Majoras, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, March 2002, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/march02/majoras.pdf>

Michael Katz, U.S. DOJ's Chief Antitrust Economist, March 2002, <http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/source/march02/katz.pdf>