Bottomless Closet Promotes Economic and Personal Self-Sufficiency: Helping Women Move into the Workforce

In 1999, Bottomless Closet opened its doors in New York City to address the issues and needs of women moving from public assistance to the workforce, from dressing for the interview to retaining the job once hired. The organization's mission is to promote economic self-sufficiency by providing business clothing and career development skills to economically disadvantaged women New York City women. In addition, by offering ongoing educational and support programs to women who have become part of the workforce, Bottomless Closet represents a vital network and resource for women at work.
